Olia Zavozina

Olia Zavozina, a Russian born fashion designer, started her entrepreneurial journey by leaving her hometown at the age of 18. Olia has been traveling and exploring the world of fashion ever since. With multiple degrees in world economics, business administration, biblical ethics and religion, she could not let her fervent passion for fashion wane so she started her own clothing label at the age of 20.

Olia was inspired to make outfits for her Barbie dolls, her friends, and herself as early as age 7. She obtained training in the art of design and tailoring in the old world and began her business in Nashville, Tennessee while she was working on her MBA degree.

The dream of that little girl to become a world class fashion designer has now become a reality. Olia's dramatic, high quality, stylish clothing designs are highly sought after by women with discriminating tastes around the world. Her clothes have been worn by Greta Gaines on the Good Morning America Show on National TV and even a special set of her designer tops were recently included in the "Swag Bag" of goodies given away in conjunction with the 2008 Country Music Television Awards.

Olia's designer fashions are available in fine boutiques. Visit her website, www.oliazavozina.com, for additional information.
